north of the province the inhabitants are especially badly off in this respect. In the south they are near Moldavia and have an opportunity of selling; the railway therefore about which there is such long discussion and which never becomes a reality is for the north a question of existence or of death. Then too a great part of the money raised by taxation goes out of the province; it does not merely change hands which would be no evil but the circulation is diminished by the constant drain which is going on. Of * In one case 200/?. were sent back after several years when the error had been discovered.. t I was told of cases where the tax for the commutation of the burdens on land (Gncnd Mntlastungs Steuer) was paid by individuals who are not yet free and who have gradually to work out their own manumission. The town of S. Regen before 1848 paid 8000/f.; now with the direct and indirect taxes 150000/7. the nine millions taxes levied in Transylvania it has been computed that four remain in and five leave the province; ' if so impoverishment is a natural consequence. I have been told by competent authorities that if we calculate what the peasant was formerly obliged to give in kind tithes to the clergyman corn hay and straw for the military at a mere nominal price besides contributions to certain foundations as a Klausenburg delivering them there also though so far off—when I say we take account of these imposts from which he now is freed it is a query whether he does not pay less at present than formerly; but the great burden is that the payment must be made in cash and he has none.* Now whether the taxation be light or too heavy the grievance is that nothing is done for the land to facilitate its payment. Heavy imposts can be borne and borne willingly where a means is given as we say * of making moneymatters thus are equalized but it is not so here. In England we can bear the burdens we do because of the many indirect advantages possessed; no more striking evidence of this can be given than the positive assertion of Stephenson that the railvays make up for the burden of the national debt. The landed proprietor who has a large amount of taxes to pay has no money either: if his barns and cellars are full—so full that their contents are in his way—but he cannot convert what they hold into money; he is willing to give * This dearth of money also prevents the peasant from averting coming evil. By a letter received from Transylvania in January 185(> I learn that the maize crop will fail and the Roumains have little or none. They see famine coming and though corn is cheap at the moment they cannot prepare against the approaching calamity having no means of purchasing t There are not live hundred persons in Transylvania who do not trench on their capital in order to live ; even 'rich ' men do so.' Words oi - on talking to me of these matters. 25 per cent interest for a loan but even at tbs exorbitant rate he is unable to obtain it. Owing to the scantiness of the population the wages of labourers when they are to be had is high—nearly double what is paid in Bohemia: there an agricultural day labourer gets 27-30&T. a day without food; in Transylvania 40-50/IT. is paid and three meals during tho day. Moreover the Wallack is a bad hired servant; you cannot depend on him for a continuance as he ceases to work directly he has enough for the morrow: yet here wheat costs Sfl. per metzen (= 40 maass or
